Every Noise at Once was a long-running attempt at an algorithmically-generated, readability-adjusted scatter-plot of the musical genre-space, based on data tracked and analyzed for 6,291 genre-shaped distinctions at Spotify through 2023-11-19. The calibration is fuzzy, but in general down is more organic, up is more mechanical and electric; left is denser and more atmospheric, right is spikier and bouncier.

Click anything to hear an example of what it sounds like.

Click the » on a genre to see a map of its artists.

Be calmly aware that this may periodically expand, contract or combust.

How We Understand Music Genres explains how this thing got started.
A Retromatic History of Music (or Love) follows these genres across years.
~~Spotify New Releases by Genre uses them to scour this week's new releases.~~ broken
(but if you get Spotify API credentials, you can try a DIY NRbG)
We Built This City On follows them to their cities of origin.
Genres by Country breaks them down by strength of association with countries.
Songs From the Edges flings you through a blast-tour of the most passionate genrecults.
Songs From the Ages samples demographic groups.
Songs From the Streets samples cities.
Collidescope makes global metagenre samplers.
Drunkard's Rock wanders around randomly for a really long time.
The Canonical Path lets you wander around non-randomly for a really long time.
The Sounds of Places plots countries as if they were genres.
(Not) Every Label at Once attempts to plot some record labels the same way.
~~Spotify World Browser shows Spotify editorial programming in different countries.~~ broken
Every Place at Once is an index of the distinctive listening of individual cities.
Hyperspace House Concerts looks for music playing only in particular places.
~~Every School at Once is an index of the distinctive listening of students by school.~~ broken
Genres in Their Own Words maps genres to words found in their song titles.
The Needle tries to find songs surging towards the edges of one obscurity or another.
~~2023 Around the World surrounds and inhabits the year in music even before it ends.~~ broken
The Approaching Worms of Christmas tries to wrap itself around things I usually fight.
The Aqueduct of Youth brings you kids' music so you can listen young.
~~Every Demographic at Once further explores listening by country, age and gender.~~ broken
And there's a dynamically-generated daily summary of Spotify Listening Patterns by Gender.
Or some other automatic lists.

Or you can do your own research.

You can also scan genres and many other things with Discover Quickly.

Read this story as a book.

Wear it as a hoodie.

2024-01-05 status update: With my 2023-12-04 layoff from Spotify I lost the internal data-access required for ongoing updates to many parts of this site. Most of this, as a result, is now a static snapshot of what, for now, will be the final state from the site's 10-year history and evolution, hosted on my own server. Some pieces may get disabled and reenabled over time, and some that only made sense with current data may never return. But we'll see.

Should all this fail, too, the site is also preserved in the Internet Archive.

Thank you to everyone who loved this site along the way, for believing in music and exploration and collective knowledge and public good. Further major news will be posted here, but for ongoing updates, follow my blog at furia.com, or @everynoise on Bluesky or Twitter.

2024-11-14 addendum: Sometimes stubbornness can be a partial substitute for privilege. The public research features here are technically and emotionally independent of my employment status, and I'm still actively maintaining them.

I'm also running two DIY experiments you can join by signing up for your own Spotify API key.

New Releases by Genre: a decentralized new version of a genre-based weekly new-release finder. You need an API key to use this, but it deliberately doesn't log into to your Spotify listening account. It's for exploring your curiosity, not your history.

Curio: a playlist editor that has gradually mutated into a holistic listening/collecting application and who knows what next. You can use the same API key for this, and indeed if you use Curio it confers some extra powers to NRbG. This one does connect to your listening account, and tries to help you make better sense and use of it.

2025-01-25 update: Spotify seems to have finally completed the process of discontinuing everything I worked on by switching the "genres" in the Spotify API from my human-supervised genre system to ML-assigned keyword tags. This is great if you like ML more than music, and don't mind having folk metal tagged as "folk", funk carioca tagged as "funk", and disco polo tagged as "disco". I mind, and so have switched the genre search, NRbG, Curio and other genre-lookup functions on this site to use the internal dataset originally derived from the map above. This means that new artists who entered the world in the last year aren't automatically being genre-categorized, but it also restores the possibility of doing that manually in my data, so hmm.

2026-05-14 update: You can now use New Releases by Genre and Curio without having to provide your own API key.

2026-08-07 update: All live API-based functions are broken at the moment, due to Spotify unexpectedly disabling everynoise's API key. There was no notice or explanation given, so hopefully this is just an accidental error. More news when I have any.

2026-09-04 update: After an appeal, API access has been re-granted and we should be back to the same state as a month ago.
